

About IMA-ISL

We, at IMA-ISL have designed the program of legal studies to not only meet the requirements for a law degree, but rather to allow the graduate to have a strong understanding of the historical and current perspectives with regards to laws and law making. A paralegal, which is the career that most students completing the degree in legal studies will work towards, includes almost all aspects of legal pleading preparation.

Paralegals in some states are able to work independently of lawyers. Typically credentialing or certification is required for paralegals whether they are working with an attorney or if they are working on their own.

Courses in the legal studies program will include will and estate planning, financial planning and basic accounting, legal document preparations, investigative techniques, preparing trial books, filing pleadings, Cyber laws, intellectual property law (copyright, patents, trademarks, designs), Technology law (IT), securities law, ADR (alternative dispute resolution) are some of the areas within the legal discipline that are constantly evolving.

Excellent written and verbal communication skills will be very important for a graduate of the legal studies program.

The legal profession is increasingly waking up to the benefits of distance education. To begin with information revolution and globalization have had their impact on the legal profession.
